

residents to this pleasant village. He was the first postmaster of the place, and served as such for 16 years. In 1865 he retired from the store business in order to give entire attention to the growing demands of his live-stock branch; and in this department his close and intelligent care and judicious management have built up a large and profitable enterprise...

... In 1823, Gould Phinney and Horace G. Phelps had a mill and other enterprises at what was known as Phinneytown. Later it was called East